

JENN CLARK

SENIOR COMMUNICATONS MANAGER, US

BIOGRAPHY

Jenn is the strategic communications lead for the US team at Imaginable Futures. She has more than a decade of experience helping the public better understand complex topics, such as equity in higher education, child care and early learning, and the status of women in the United States.

Prior to joining Imaginable Futures, she was an independent communications consultant, providing communications planning and content development support to many of the leading organizations working to drive change for families. She was previously the Director of Communications at the Institute for Women's Policy Research (IWPR), where she worked with the Institute's Student Parent Success Initiative team to guide messaging on its trailblazing research, shape public conversation and engage partners in addressing the needs of the one in five college students raising children. She also led its state-based strategic communications efforts on women's employment and access to paid leave and child care, where she regularly provided strategic communications advice and media relations support to local and national partners around the country.

Jenn received a Bachelor of Arts in History and International Relations at Boston University.

Jenn lives in North Carolina with her husband, son and an adorably co-dependent chihuahua mix. She enjoys running, vegetarian cooking and good wine.
